Our subscribers will please notify this office at once of any failure or delay in the delivery of their papers.

A Des Moines clerk in a cigar store made a novel bet on the election which will result in a wedding. A lady friend of his, who is a strong Democrat, agreed to marry him in case Cleveland was defeated, feeling sure of his election. The news of the election somewhat surprised her, but she has agreed to fulfil her part of the program, and there will be a wedding in about a month.

St. Martin's Church.

The dedication of the Catholic church of St. Martin at Martinsville was quite an event, and will long be remembered by those who were present. Bishop Gallagher and Rev. A. Badelon went out to West station on Sunday evening and thence went to the new church where the dedication services were held. Upon the arrival of Bishop Gallagher and Father Badelon they were met by a guard of fifty mounted men carrying the Bohemian national colors at their head and arrayed in costumes of the same colors. Besides this guard there was a large crowd of spectators who joined in the escort of the bishop to the church. Upon alighting the bishop blessed the people and on Monday morning at 9 o'clock the dedication took place.

An Enjoyable Evening.

The audience which greeted Newton Beers in his character of Joe Arrhenoy, the Swart King in "Lost in London," at The Garland, was well repaid for coming out last night. There is little of the play itself but sufficient to bring out the strong powers of Mr. Beers as a fine actor. The specialties introduced in the fourth act were most pleasing to the audience and round after round of appreciative applause greeted each new feature. The fine contralto voice of Miss Kate Romaine as she sang a number of old familiar songs had a happy effect upon the audience which was in no way lessened when the North Britain Pan Pipe singers, Messrs. Hardin, Rareshide, Gullmotte and Sykes appeared and treated them to a number of excellent selections. All were in splendid voice and their renditions were enthusiastically encored. Harvey Gilfoill furnished no end of amusement by his matchless imitations of people, things and animals. On the whole the evening's entertainment was well worth a liberal patronage and is among the best of its class yet presented at The Garland.

Excellent Judgment.

"What do you think of the new arrival, Professor Upguy?"
"I've never heard him perform, but I know that he has splendid judgment in musical matters."
"How do you know?"
"When we were at the gathering at Spinner's last evening he was the first to request me to sing."—Lincoln Journal.

A Remedy.

Harry—Why, Tom, what in goodness' name have you got in your trousers?
Tom—Dear me! I was in hopes it wouldn't be noticed. You see, I've been out to the ball ground all day, and that means a thrashing when I get home; so I just put a tin can upon where I fancied it would be of some use, but I'm afraid dad's eyes'll be as sharp as yours.

HUNTING IN THE ALPS.

The Dangers of Chamois Stalking—Shooting the Auerhahn.

In reality Alpine sport is considerably tamer than the passing tourist usually supposes. Chamois stalking, though the few who practice it declare it to be the most exciting of all pastimes, is for the most part, at least in Austria, left entirely to the poachers. The physical exertion it requires, the dangers it involves and the rarity, or rather the entire want of, stanch and well trained hounds, account for this. Both the chamois and the roe are driven, but in a way suited to the character of the country and impossible on an English estate.

Long before dawn the guests who are invited to take part in a chamois hunt assemble at an appointed place. Then the steep climb into the valley which is to be the scene of operations begins. When the proper positions are reached, the head forester assigns to each of the guests a place near one of the passes; the chamois are likely to take. All these ambushes are hidden from the heights above by rocks or bushes, and they are always from three to four hundred, usually more than a thousand, feet apart. When once a sportsman has been placed he is expected to remain where he is as silently as he can. He must not leave his post on any account, as this might not only disturb the drive, but endanger his own life. At about the same time as the hunting party leave their rendezvous a party of drivers accompanied by dogs start from the other side of the mountain range. The noise they make frightens the chamois over the crest and, if the parties have been properly organized, into the valley, where a warm welcome has been prepared for them. Except in very rare cases, those who are posted above are expected to let the herd pass before shooting, in order not to spoil the sport of their friends below. The hunters must, of course, always be placed so that the wind blows toward and not from them. Roe are for the most part shot in a similar way, though roe stalking is by no means unusual.

Auerhahn stalking is a far more exciting and peculiarly Alpine form of sport, and it is the favorite recreation of the emperor of Austria. It is only in the mating season, roughly speaking in April and May, that it is permitted. The cock is generally the most timid and cautious of birds; but at this season he becomes a victim of passion, and loses his head—at least at intervals. At dawn he flies to a spot which he knows to be frequented by the hens, perches upon an exposed bough, so that all the charms of his plumage may be seen, and begins his nuptial song. It consists of three distinct parts, with a short pause between each; and, while piping it, the cock extends his feathers and beats upon the bough with his wings. At such times he seems utterly unconscious of everything that goes on around him. This is the sportsman's opportunity; he has taken his place before dawn near a spot which he knows to be frequented and concealed himself in the best cover he can find. As soon as the bird begins its call, which is technically known as its balz, he springs forward to take good aim. An Alpine sportsman would no more think of shooting an Auerhahn in any other way than an English sportsman would think of shooting a fox. In the greater part of the country the hens are legally protected during the whole of the year; they have a peculiar cry, which some foresters successfully imitate for the purpose of luring their mates.
